For a happy and healthy life a human body works in a harmonious synchronization of millions of intricate systems, where each system contributes its part in continuing the survival of the body they are a part of. The nature has designed our bodies to initiate and continue these systems on its own. One such crucial function is extending the survival of any species for years to come. This phenomenon is known as reproduction. It is a process by which any living species extends its existence by producing off-springs which bear the similarities in both appearance and behaviour. This ensures that a species is not likely to get extinct. It also ensures the evolution of a species as the features which are carried forward by an off-spring keep getting refined.
